Climate change

Storms, floods and droughts are some of the expected consequences which could affect different areas of the world. A rise in temperatures could cause melting glaciers. As a consequence, the water in the seas and oceans will increase, so sea and ocean levels will rise all over the world. For this reason, people living by the sea will be at risk from flooding. Weather variations could also cause changes in the quantity of rainfall in different parts of the world.

CLIMATE CHANGE

Some places might have heavy rains, while in other places it might not rain at all. As a consequence, some crops may not grow well and there will be a scarcity of food in some parts of the world. If the weather and temperatures change, many plants and animals will not be able to survive. For example, if the ice in the Arctic melts, polar bears and other animals will have to look for new homes. Since natural habitats of plants and animals will be damaged, many species could become extinct.

Alice Springs

"Australians call the central desert area of their country "the outback". Alice Springs is a town in the middle of the outback. It is sometimes called Alice or the Alice. The native Arrernte people have lived near Alice Springs for more than 50,000 years. The town grew in the 1860s. It started as a telegraph station- part of the Overland telegraph line, which connected the North and the South of Australia. Later, explorers came to Alice looking for gold, and early settlers created enormous farms there.

Hispanic heritage in the USA

Did you know that many iconic images we associate with the USA come from Spain or Latin America? These include cowboy culture, the colonial architecture of Los Angeles, tortilla chips and the dollar symbol. Hispanic or Latino people come from Spanish-speaking countries, especially South America, and live in the USA. Many are immigrants, but most were born in the USA and are American citizens. They make up more than 17% of the American population, around 55 million people. About 15 million Hispanic people are aged between 18 and 33.

Hispanic heritage in USA

Hispanic culture is important in American history. Many southern and western states, like Texas, New Mexico, Nevada and California, belonged to the Spanish Empire, then to Mexico, and became part of the USA during the 19th century. In the 20th century many buildings were built in the Hispanic-Mexican style, characterized by simple white walls, arches and roofs with red tiles. Many Hispanic people are bilingual and Spanish is the second most spoken language in the USA. Latino television channels, music and cuisine influence American tastes and habits.
